GUILTY OF MURDER WEEDMARK WILL HANG

married, in Brookville, he caught her in a room with a man named Kelly and she was in the act of letting down her clothes. Then there were occasions recently in Smiths Falls he swore.

WEEDMARK CROSS-EXAMINED.

Cross examined by Mr. DuVernet, prisoner admitted that he didn't kill his wife for what she had done twenty years ago. His wife had been a good wife for fifteen years. His wife was a hard-working woman, but he complained she never worked for him. He didn't blame his wife taking a glass of beer, but, "do blame her for having me up for non-support, for I was a hard worker, and made good money. I felt strongly about this, because I thought she had no reason to do it."

Prisoner admitted his wife got him pardoned in two months' time, and he again resented her charge of non-support when he came back. He denied choking her till the blood spouted from mouth and nose. Still he admitted he choked her.

Then on the night before the murder, both had been drinking, and the killing of his wife was the result of a drunken row. Witness then reiterated the version, already given by himself, of the events and words leading up to the moment he choked his wife to death. Afterwards he told Mrs. Gilligan, "I have killed Kate," she said to prisoner: "Oh, my God, did you kill her Kate?" Prisoner replied: "Yes Sarah, I have killed her."

Prisoner denied saying the things witnesses swore he said to them, particularly the idea conveyed that he wanted to kill her.

At one stage prisoner swore Mr. Code told what was untrue, and in the next breath, said "he couldn't tell whether he said those things to him or not."

Prisoner denied having a baseball bat, and stated that while both were drunk at eleven o'clock, they were happy and nice.

Narrating the incident with McLachlin in the evening before, prisoner boasted that McLachlin had stumped him out, and he (prisoner) said he would have "soon tipped him (McLachlin) up if he had given him any more lip."

WEEDMARK IS SANE.

Court then adjourned at one until two o'clock. When court resumed, Dr. Bruce-Smith was called. He stated he saw prisoner at Perth jail on 11th of May, and subject-d him to a mental and physical examination, when prisoner was stripped, witness found a small area of slight discoloration on the left side, on the upper portion of the rib. It didn't hurt prisoner and prisoner told witness that was where his wife had thrown teapot at him.

To Mr. DuVernet, witness said he found prisoner in excellent condition, physically and mentally.

Chief Edwards testified prisoner showed him where wife had hit him and stated to Mr. DuVernet Weedmark talked rationally.

This closed the evidence for the defence.

In rebuttal Mr. DuVernet recalled Dr. Stammers who swore that when he visited the Weedmark house, Weedmark was sober, and to Mr. Foy he stated that the commission of the act might have the effect of sobering a man.

PRISONER'S COUNSEL'S PLEADING.

Then a few minutes after the court opened, Mr. Foy began his address to the jury. In opening, Mr. Foy briefly and eloquently referred to the fact that the crime of murder was but seldom committed in this county. He spoke of the responsibility resting on them and explained the difference between murder and manslaughter. Reviewing in a concise way the unhappy household, he said the prisoner was a good man when not drinking, but drink made him an irresponsible demon. Both Weedmark and his wife were addicted to drinking, and counsel pictured the scene of the night before as a drunken debauch. When there was such drunkenness present, the semblance of happiness in the home disappeared. The prisoner gets in an unstrung state caused by the demon drink, and when he is provoked by his wife hurling the teapot at him, he grabs her and it is all over in a moment. Counsel pleaded sudden provocation which brought the crime under manslaughter.

"It is the law, and a good law, and the law of the land, that a man intoxicated can't be held guilty for a crime causing death as murder. The charge is reduced to manslaughter. That is held by the highest court to be the law applicable to such crimes. The law allows liquor to be sold to Weedmark, and should the law demand his life when he is made a demon by drink and in such a state takes a life;

"Your duty is a laborious one, but if there is a doubt in your mind the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of it for manslaughter. The taking of the life of the woman appears hard, and no mercy was shown because it was done quickly. But I am going to ask mercy from you, gentlemen of the jury, for the prisoner at the bar, because he was deprived of his free will by intoxicating liquors. Give him the benefit of the doubt and remember the saying of one above all others, 'Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy.'"

CROWN COUNSEL SPEAKS.

In opening his address to the jury, Mr. DuVernet complimented Mr. Foy on his able and eloquent address and stated it was not for the crown to make an able plea. All we have to do is to present the facts. Has murder been committed? The fact of killing is not only cruel, but admitted. Sometimes juries have a difficulty in reaching a decision that the prisoner is really guilty. But this is no such case, and if the defence had not put forth such a queer plea, he would have left the case to them without an address.

As representing the crown, he resented the fact that not only had a life been trampled out, but the reputation of the dead woman had been dragged into court and besmirched, when she was no longer here to defend it. Was it right to bring up things of twenty years ago? If it could do the prisoner any good, he could stand it, but when prisoner was asked if it was because of alleged indiscretions of twenty years ago he had killed his wife he said no. There was not a tittle of evidence to justify charges against the woman.

Counsel described the trouble at the house the night before as a drunken row, not a debauch as his learned friend had termed it. Counsel emphasized fact the murder was premeditated and narrated the unpleasant incident of Weedmark choking his wife soon after he came back from Central Prison. He said it once too often and the woman is dead.

Isn't that revenge? Revenge was in his mind. It was rage not drunkenness that was the cause when he had her on the floor and squeezed her life out. Then he walks around and boasts of death. Was this action of drunk man? No, it was revenge for sending him to prison for 6 months. This is the evidence of revenge, not of drunkenness. And a man, on the other hand, can't take a drink and escape the consequences. The facts show a murder was committed, and as the law states, a life for a life, but your duty is to bring in a verdict.

HIS LORDSHIP'S CHARGE.

His Lordship, in charging the jury, referred to the scripture quotations counsel used, and instructed jury had nothing to do with them. He then explained the duties of those in charge of the case. It was the jury's duty to find on the evidence. In summing up the evidence, his Lordship took the plea of the defence first. That plea was culpable homicide. The prisoner wants you to believe he did it under passion, and wants you therefore to find him guilty of manslaughter. He did not kill for previous misconduct. He wants you to believe, instead that if she had not hit him with teapot, he would not have choked her. His passion rose out of excessive drinking.

All disagree as to time. The children put it at twelve, the prisoner half-past two, and Haudyside near four.

One witness says prisoner stated, "if she (Evlyn) did not run away he would do it to her." Contrast this with what he says: he didn't know what he was doing. Prisoner was complaining of being shut up for six months in Central, then when he killed his wife, he told Dr. Stammers, "she would not send him down anymore." Then contrast his plea heat of passion caused by provocation, with why he came out and said: "I killed her. I meant to do it. Is that not the way to do it, do it right?"

JURY RETURNS.

The jury retired at 3.30, and at 4.15 returned with a verdict. The courtroom was hushed and with measured cadence, the clerk told of the jury.

Then the foreman arose to reply to the question: "Hath the jury reached a verdict?" and replied slowly that Weedmark was guilty of murder.

As the verdict was given, there was not a twitch of Weedmark's muscles. Outwardly he was indifferent.

SENTENCED TO DEATH.

"Ernst Weedmark," said his Lordship, "my duty now follows. You have been found guilty of murder by picked and representative men of your county. Theirs is a unanimous verdict, and I can't say that in any way I am dissatisfied with it. I am not going to speak to you at any length. Your own feeling, if you have any, should tell you how to feel for the unlawful, foolish and rash act you committed on the wife you swore to cherish—the mother of your children. The sentence of the law for this is death."

And quietly and distinctly his Lordship passed the sentence of death, fixing the date for Dec. 14th. Then in conclusion, he said, "I can only beseech you to turn to Almighty God for forgiveness, who sent his only Son to die on the cross for sinners."

The prisoner was led away, quite indifferent, and the death watch began.

Miss McLeod, of Moose Creek, sister of Mrs. James McIlraith of Lanark died on Oct. 3 at the age of 22 years.
